

Imbler School Update

HONOR SOCIETY: Suzie Marshall questioned the Imbler School Board at their May 10 meeting on how students are chosen for the National Honor Society. Her comments were well received, and the board later voted to explore some of her suggestions further.

The basic problem that Marshall outlined was poor communication in the process of choosing students to be honored. Students have little idea of the standards they are expected to meet, Marshall said, and teachers have no information on what students are involved in outside of their own classes.

Under National Honor Society rules, students must have at least a 3.4 GPA for eligibility, and are then voted from 1-5 for leadership, character, and service.

Marshall's suggestions included having students being informed of the process earlier in the year and having them submit write-ups of their activities. A discussion session could also be arranged for teachers to share information on individual students. Students, Marshall thought, should be informed on how well they have done so they could later work on the deficiencies noted.

BAMBLING BABIES: Fantasies about cuddly newborn babies seldom include sleep-destroying, all night crying. Baby, Think it Over, a creation of Dick and Mary Jurmain, will do just that. Programmed to simulate a baby's sleeping and waking pattern, and its demands for food, the doll's cries can only be stopped by feeding--turning a key attached by a tamper-proof bracelet. Summer-illie resident Vicki Correll presented information on the electronic doll to the Imbler school board in May. The dolls, costing about $220, are being used as educational tools in schools and health clinics around the country.

The school board told Correll that they would speak with Imbler teachers about using the doll, and would consider the matter further.
